

THE NEW PLAYS

"Honey Girl"
Youthful, Lively

By CHARLES DARNTON

THERE seems to be no stopping Henry Blossom's old racing play "Checkers," for it has struck a new gait at the Cohan & Merriam Theatre as musical comedy with "Honey Girl" as its name. By way of added novelty the horses in the race are seen dashing madly across the back drop, and it is no exaggeration to say they are the funniest horses ever seen. Checkers, oddly enough, stands with his back to the track crying fervently to the audience, "Come on, Honey Girl!" With the cash he raises on a ring given him by his honey girl he wins $25,000. This ready money enables him to stop a run on the bank of his sweetheart's father, and the rest is a cinch.

It's all very sentimental and lovely, but as "Honey Girl" is youthful and lively nothing else matters. The music by Albert Von Tilzer is of the song-shop variety and tuneful enough to be popular. A somewhat elaborate "Blue Bird" number is introduced as a dream song of two children, but the kiddies remain wide-awake and watch the dancers who figure in it with lively interest. They could scarcely be expected to sleep though the singing of Adeline Esposito, though she has a good voice.

Lynne Overman is a likeable Checkers, but in striving for ease he falls into a doddering manner, and he has another bad habit of talking as though his collar were choking him. "Personality" is all very well, but simplicity is better. George McKay plays Tip the tout with amusing frankness and dances in much the same way with Rene Iliano, a thoroughly unique and clever performer. This grotesque young woman is a whole show in herself. While it may be considered quite proper to kick a lady off the stage in polite vaudeville, Mr. McKay should restrain his impulse to give this vigorous, not to say vulgar, aid to Miss Iliano. Edna Kates is an attractive "honey girl," though sweetness is missing in her singing. Mercer Thompson and Charlie Sewell dance cleverly, and so do the chorus girls, many of whom are real charmers.
